

Create a Resume

Last Modified on 09/18/2024 3:14 pm PDT

In this article, you'll find tips on how to format your resume and what content to include. In addition, you'll find bullet point examples and an action verb list.

Formatting Tips

- Try your best to keep it to one page by highlighting your most recent and relevant work experience. If you have additional experiences you want to share, add them to your LinkedIn profile.
- List your experiences in reverse chronological order by putting your most recent experiences at the top and previous experiences towards the bottom.
- Make sure your titles and dates are aligned so it's quick and easy to follow.
- Make sure you have no grammatical errors.

Content Tips

- Use an action verb at the start of each bullet point to catch the reader's eyes.
- Make sure your action verb is in the correct tense. If this is your current role, verbs should be present tense ("support"). If you're describing a previous role, verbs should be past tense ("supported").
- Try not to repeat an action verb. When you're applying for a new job, try to tailor your resume to the job description by mirroring the action verbs they use to describe the role and responsibilities.
- Provide the who/what/when/where/why/how for each bullet point.
- When possible, list results. Give the reader a clear picture of what you accomplished by providing numbers (#, $, %). Instead of writing "assisted customers" you might write "assisted 100 customers per week." Instead of writing "increased sales" you might write "increased sales by $30K from the previous year."

Bullet Point Examples
